LNDD Lab Error: Wrong Athlete

- Measures drug
- Attributes to wrong athlete

Please read the caveats at the beginning of the appendix.

In this document, LNDD issues a retraction of an adverse analytical finding (positive doping test) to The World Squash Federation.

Upon review, the lab reported that it had attributed the finding of a banned substance (Terbutaline) to the wrong athlete.

LNDD asks that that FINA destroy the previous report.

This is serious. If you identify the wrong athlete, you are accusing the innocent. If you can't match a sample identification number with an athlete, you can't identify a doping violation.

I read this as a failure of "the Laboratory to ensure the full reliability and accuracy of drug tests and the accurate reporting of results" and grounds for the revocation of the laboratory's accreditation.
